

Been vs. Being

Being is used in passive structures after is, am, are, was, were. It is also used to connect two clauses when both clauses have the same subject.

Been is used after has, have or had to make perfect and perfect continuous tense forms.

Fill in the blanks with been or being.

1. This has going on for a while.

been

being

2. Where have you all this while?

been

being

3. The walls are painted.

being

been

Been vs. Being

4. I felt that I was watched.

been

being

5. She has working here for six years.

been

being

6. the only applicant, he got the job.

Being

Been

7. You have always a great help.

Been vs. Being

been

being

8. The document is drafted now.

been

being

9. The suspect is interrogated.

been

being

10. The suspect has interrogated.

been

Been vs. Being

being

11. The child has missing since yesterday.

been

being

12. She loves looked at.

been

being

Answers

This has been going on for a while.

Where have you been all this while?

The walls are being painted.

I felt that I was being watched.

She has been working here for six years.

Being the only applicant, he got the job.

Been vs. Being

You have always been a great help.

The document is being drafted now.

The suspect is being interrogated.

The suspect has been interrogated.

The child has been missing since yesterday.

She loves being looked at.