

Wrote vs. Rote

Because of their similar pronunciations, homophones present a serious challenge to writers. This even becomes more difficult if the homophones are also spelled similarly. This is the case with the words wrote and rote. Not only do they sound the same, they also look the same, with only a single “w” separating their spellings. This post will help you distinguish between the two terms in order for you to use them properly in your writing.

The word wrote is the past tense of the verb write which means “to mark letters, words, or other symbols on a surface, typically paper, with a pen, pencil, or similar implement,” “to compose, write, and send a letter to someone,” or “to compose a text or work for written or printed reproduction or publication; put into literary form and set down in writing.”
